FIGHT ON HEIFER SALES IS A MENACE

Cattle Industry Threatened by Packers' Protest Against Heifers.

"This agitation by the eastern packing houses against the selling of heifers is a most vital blow aimed at the cattle raising industry," said D. F. White, of the D. F. White Commission company. "These packers are proposing to have congress enact laws to the effect that no heifer under two years can be sold for market. Any legislative interference with cattle-men's ability to sell at their own discretion any part of their stock is a great injustice, that will jeopardize the entire cattle industry of the southwest and west, one of the greatest industries we have."

All cowmen know that the best improved herds are built up by the culls being cut out from both ends of the herd—calves and older stock. In culling, not only bad colors and ill shapes must go, but the main idea is to constantly improve and shape up the herd, breeding a more thrifty, better looking and better all around animal.

Through the west, two years out of three, the seasons are so irregular and late, that often when the range is not good after a dry season, there is nothing the ranchman can ship to fat market but his calves. If he cannot ship calves to market he would be forced to ship cows in poor condition that would not even pass for canners, and which would bring very little above bone and hide.

Every cowman knows that often if the calf is not taken away from the cow in the fall, the ranchman is likely to lose both the cow and the calf by the next spring, particularly in dry seasons when the range is poor. Cows with calves cannot be moved like steers to new ranges. Many old time cowmen have knocked the calves in the head in order to save the cow when the grass was short, or when it was too late to move both cow and calf.

Resolutions were passed at a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Texas Cattle Raisers' association condemning any such action by congress or a menace to the cattle industry, and preparing to put up a hard fight to defeat the packers in passing such a law. In this fight every cattleman in the west and the southwest is concerned and every western and southwestern city is closely connected with the prosperity of this portion of the country.

GAYNOR'S BODY LIES IN STATE IN NEW YORK

Private Funeral Service in Brooklyn Home Is Conducted Without Music; Brief Eulogy Is Delivered.

New York, Sept. 20.—A brief and simple service, which was attended only by members of the Gaynor family, and a few close friends, was held today at the Gaynor home in Brooklyn, before the body of mayor William J. Gaynor was removed to the city hall, where it will lie in state tomorrow.

The Rev. Frank Page, of Fairfax, Va., former rector of St. John's Episcopal church, in Brooklyn, conducted the service, which was a brief form of the Episcopal ceremony. In deference to the expressed wish of Mrs. Gaynor, there was no music and the Rev. Mr. Page offered only a short eulogy of the late mayor.

A few minutes after 4 o'clock, the coffin, containing the body of mayor Gaynor, was borne down the steps of the Gaynor residence by 10 members of the fire and police departments. An escort of 250 mounted policemen accompanied the body across Brooklyn bridge to the city hall.

Over the entire distance thousands had gathered on either side, and at the Manhattan end of the bridge several thousand persons awaited the arrival of the motor horse, bearing the body.

Tonight the coffin rests on a catafalque in the center of the rotunda in the city hall. The flag of the Mayor of the City of New York covers the coffin, while massed around it are various floral offerings.

MUFFLER DOESN'T OUT DOWN POWER

Test Shows That the Muffler Cutoff Does Not Enable Engine to Put Any Power.

In general it may be said that there is a slight difference in power in favor of the engine running without a muffler. This is true because the muffler generally adds to the back pressure and hence cuts down the output of the engine. When running with a clean muffler, however, and one which has been properly designed for the car, there is so little difference that it can never be noticed by the person driving the car. In fact it has been shown that at some speeds there was more power delivered when the cutoff was closed than when it was open. This is exemplified in a test made by an automobile factory some time ago, in which it was shown that a clean muffler which was the proper capacity for the car would not decrease the power output of the motor. At the lowest motor speeds there was a greater output with a muffler than without.

A strenuous effort is made to design all undergarments so as to eliminate every wrinkle and the manufacturers are ever on the alert to incorporate new ideas in the clinging petticoat. Corset covers have graduated to under bodices. The under bodice fills a long felt want with evening gowns and filmy lace waists. Crepe de Chine, net, lace, silk, embellished with laces and ribbon or tulle shoulder bands often adorned with adorable ribbon or chiffon flowers are certainly attractive fancies.

NEGLIGES. The busy woman (and who is not busy these days?) welcomes the idea of resting in a quilted silk jacket embellished with embroidered flowers, and wears it in preference to a tea gown, as it gives a charming appearance when worn with a dainty silk skirt to match, and a boudoir cap of the same shade called the "Mad Cap" completes this dainty outfit. The array of elaborate negliges worn with extra little mantles are almost endless.

The clever woman will recognize the possibility of transforming a discarded evening gown into a gorgeous house robe by the addition of a new silk or chiffon coat. The gowns are undeniably wider and show many novel draped effects.

Bedroom slippers and boudoir cape usually match the neglige. Every woman needs a perfectly comfortable rest robe and it is easy to differentiate it from the commonplace, if a little thought is given to the fabric and style, and attention to creating such variations as flowing sleeves, fancy sashes, deep cape collars, old cut reverses and fluffy frills.

CORSETS.

To be perfectly comfortable and unconscious of being corseted, and still wear a good fitting corset is something to be thankful for. In every way artificial lines are giving way to natural effects, and the general tendency is for

What is New in Lingerie?

By ALICE LEDNAM.

LINGERIE holds the most important place in the refined fastidious woman's wardrobe, for she realizes that no matter how perfect fitting her gown is, if the shape and quality of her undergarments are not correct, it will make a vast difference. To be strictly up to date, it is better not to buy a large supply of any one garment, as the changes in outerwear change in such a kaleidoscopic fashion that it is wiser to replenish often than to be overstocked with lingerie that has not a just-right look.

As the expense of fine lingerie is rather in the style and in the fine handwork than in the materials used, good economical results can be obtained by the clever needlewoman at home. The prettiest lingerie is the French, which invariably combine hand embroidery with lace of every description. New and irresistible creations distinguished by touches of individuality are copied in the less valuable domestic garments at remarkably low prices.

Simplicity in underwear is becoming more and more in vogue. Hemstitching, chain stitching, self trimming, tucking, puffing, beading, and laces, shadow and heavier kinds, are used as trimmings.

Some recent importations are finished with small scallops, edged with narrow bands of colored linen or lawn. In many cases bands of white cotton tulle or footie in various widths are used in the same manner as the long popular lace and embroidery was formerly used. Shadow laces, Bohemian, Valenciennes, Cluny and Torchon laces are used alone or in combination with eyelet embroidery.

Cotton crepe is extensively used in moderate priced garments. As no ironing is required, these are a wise selection.

It is practically certain that there will be no decrease in the rage for crepe de chine and china silk in dainty corsets. A rumor from Paris tells of night dresses made of printed silk. Those in Chinese designs are preferably made in kimono form. They are fashioned without a collar and simply tied around the neck with silk cord and tassels. Pink is a favorite color for night dresses. Plain and printed silk and silk jersey are used for the Harem bloomers, which come to the ankles and take the place of petticoats. Also for Harem petticoats, which come just beneath the knees and have elastic bands run through casing at the bottom of the skirt.

Petticoats are made of plain and fancy jersey with flut ribbons of the same, have become staple articles of wear. "Scant" is the only word which actually describes the proportions of the new undergarments.

Something new is four-in-one combination corset cover, petticoat and drawers. This combination consists of a princess slip, a petticoat, corset cover and Directorate drawers made in such a way as to be detachable at the waist line. Each garment may be worn as a separate piece, or attached by means of lace bands threaded with ribbon to the others.

Another combination is formed of a brassiere, a corset cover, a circular cut petticoat and pantalon. These are trimmed with net footie, banded with pale blue lawn. The skirt has a plaited dounce of blue lawn edged with net.

For went with décolleté gowns there is a combination chemise and brassiere. The brassiere is of shadow lace over pale colored chiffon with tulle straps over the shoulders. This is made detachable to a crepe de chine skirt so that it can be dry cleaned. Ribbon run through beading at the edge of the brassiere and the top of the skirt of the chemise join the two.

The new shaped chemise is often cut in one piece in kimono shape. The garment is shaped by the goring under the arm. Ribbon threaded through embroidered eyelets hold the fullness in place around the neck.

The officer also lodged Willie Phillips, Jr., in the county jail on the same kind of warrant. Young Phillips has run away from home several times.

as sound in principle. Among other things, he suggested that any bank having bonds on deposit with the treasury, equal to half its capital stock, should have the right to deposit commercial paper with the federal reserve bank as collateral for an additional issue of notes, the total issue of notes of such bank not to exceed the amount of its capital stock.

Senator Hitchcock was inclined to approve this plan.

It was stated by attaches of the department of justice that special assistant attorney Townsend had given to Mr. Thompson tonight all the information that he proposes to ask for in the house on Monday.
